

A Personal & Professional Development Company

Finding your ideal career will take patience and clarity of purpose. This exercise is designed to really get you thinking about the type of career that would feel meaningful to you. Take the time to answer these questions. I always encourage my clients to visit with those who know you best and ask them what type of career they see you in. Often, those around us see our potential more than we do.

Describe your ideal career or business.

Why are you passionate about this career path?

What does this career offer you?

What do you bring to the table?

What skills do you currently possess?

What skills will you need to develop?

What certifications or additional education will you need to acquire?

What material and financial resources will you need?

Who can mentor you as you pursue your new career path?

How will you feel when you begin this new journey?

Who will you become on your reinvention journey?
